The scheme initially comprised a 123 bed hotel situated in London Docklands. The development was constructed over five storeys with four floors of bedroom accommodation, two restaurants, conference facilities and main reception area.

The building was formed from prefabricated bedroom pods that were manufactured in France and shipped to the UK for installation onto an insitu concrete ground and first floor construction.

The main structure was clad using a palette of traditional facing brickwork, curtain walling and flat metal panels.

External balcony areas combine timber decking flooring with galvanised steel balustrading incorporating stainless steel cable infill.

Woods Hardwick performed the role of lead consultants for the design and build contractor and were responsible for coordinating the design and development of conceptual ideas with the hotel operator.

Woods Hardwick were subsequently retained for a further enlargement phase of the hotel creating an additional 163 bedrooms, restaurant, bar facilities and a fitness centre with indoor swimming pool
